Yearbook Dedication

Ms. Deirdre London
School Nurse

The BHS class of 2013 is proud to dedicate this yearbook to Deirdre London. As a dedicated staff member of Brookline High School for 20 years, Deirdre London represents to many the "heart" of our school community. She provides emotional and medical support to both students and staff on a daily basis.

Deirdre has been instrumental in the development of emergency response procedures. She is a calm voice and cool head in a crisis. She tirelessly advocates for students' timely return to academics after prolonged illness, hospitalization, or injury. She is often the liaison between home, school, and the medical provider for our most vulnerable students and their families. Regardless of the situation, Ms. London, informed by her 20 years of service to Brookline High School, expertly manages the daily challenges of our richly diverse and multicultural school community. She is a trusted resource, leader, mentor, and very often the "go to" person for students, staff, and faculty.

Dee's office is a place of refuge, free from judgment, where anyone can seek out an informed opinion or just a listening and compassionate ear. She is the consummate professional who is generous with her humor and hugs. Her door is always open... From the bottom of our hearts, the class of 2013 thanks you Ms. London.

Do you remember that first day in September?

Superfans bring school spirit

The Superfans hope to increase student attendance and school spirit at sporting events. The club is led by seniors Bernie Zak and Jake Lansbury and social studies teacher Michael Normant.

ALEX FRIEDMAN
News Layout Editor

Having established themselves last year as enthusiastic sports fanatics, the Superfans have a vision for the school.

"We want 500 people to fill up Schluntz Gymnasium every Friday night for basketball," said Zak, one of the co-founders of the Superfans. "That's my long term goal."

The club focuses on the sports which fans gravitate to the most, which are typically sports like football and basketball, but it also tries to get fans to watch other sports teams like volleyball and hockey, according to Zak. One of the goals of the Superfans is to expand the club from highlighting the more popular sports to all sports and even to the arts.

"I would go to a play and there would be 20 people in the audience," social studies teacher Michael Normant, who is also the adviser of the club, said. "I went to a Jazz Band concert, and the audience was so small it could fit on the stage. I would love to be ambitious and say, 'Why can't you have Superfans for productions and for music?'"

Normant said that the club isn't just a way of getting more fans for the events. He wants the club to be a culture changer.

"For me, the bigger picture is supporting your classmates and supporting your peers no matter what they are working hard to accomplish," Normant said. "We aren't just about athletics. We are about everything in this school and generating enthusiasm in this community."

Zak has similar goals for the club.

"It's about changing the culture, not about one event," Zak said.

The lack of school spirit in previous years has inspired the club to organize multiple events.

"We're hoping to have some additional pep rallies this year," Normant said. "We've got the shirts that are around, we're trying to organize a pep band this year, and we're continuing to work on the slow process of getting a new logo for the school."

According to Normant and Zak, part of changing the culture involves the idea that everyone at the school should be a Superfan. This caused Normant to change the name of the club to the Brookline Superfan Organizing Committee.

"If you talk about Superfans as a club, our club should technically include everyone in the school," Normant said. "What we do in the meetings is to try to plan things to get people to have more school spirit."

Normant and Zak agree that everyone at the school should be involved and spirited, whether they are faculty or student. According to Normant, even the new headmaster Deborah Holman, is a supporter of the club.

"The good thing about the new headmaster, Ms. Holman, is that she really loves the idea," Normant said. "She has been to a few football games so far. It says a lot about her support for the school and the culture. At the game versus Braintree, she went into the student section and tried to get them fired up. She is really supportive and into the idea of having a raised level of school spirit."

Normant thinks that the Superfans have been very successful so far.

"In just the two years it has existed, I would say that the group has made a tangible difference. Just the fact that I hear more people talk about games and we see the shirts around," he said.

Some students, however, aren't as optimistic as Normant.

"I feel like our school has such a lack of school spirit that the Superfans have the work set out for them," junior Henry Shreffler said. "It's ingrained in our culture. I don't feel like we will ever get the same amount of school spirit as the schools around. It's a characteristic of BHS."

Normant acknowledges that it's possible that the Superfans will fail to create a new culture. However, he thinks that the students want the new, more spirited culture, but they just haven't been exposed to it yet.

"In the end, if the culture isn't sticking, I will just have to say, 'Oh well, that's not the culture,'" Normant said. "I don't think that's the case. I think that this culture just needs to be brought into the light."

Girls challenge male competitors

EMMA NASH
Arts Writing Editor

A digital pace clock, spelling out minutes and seconds in bright orange, overlooks the members of the girls swim team as they take laps around the Evelyn Kirrane Aquatics Center pool. Here, the clock is their chief opponent, matched in rhythm by their arms' steady slaps against the surface of the water.

But how does the girls swim team keep pace racing not against the clock or even other girls, but against boys?

The girls swim team faces boys from other schools at its meets due to Title IX, a law stating that no sex can be excluded from any school-sponsored sports activity. When financial concern and lack of male interest lead a boys swim team to be cut, the boys swim with the girls instead, according to coach Jimmy Stallings.

Assistant coach Kim Draggoo said that she wants boys without their own team to have the same opportunity

Students seek greater athletic competition outside of school

How much would you sacrifice in order to pursue a passion you loved and hoped to do in the future?

Athletes like juniors Daniella Cruz, Jacob Rosenkalt and Zak Russell are fiercely driven by their passion for sports, which they pursue outside of school on separate teams.

Cruz said that she has a short amount of time for homework after school and three to four-hour swim practices for Charles River Aquatics.

"I don't come back until 9 p.m. Then, I eat dinner and try to finish the rest of my work until midnight or 1 a.m. or until whenever I finish," Cruz said.

Russell, who also swims for Charles River Aquatics, said he struggles to find time to complete all his work with extensive practices taking up most of the afternoon and evening.

"It's kind of rough trying to manage homework, music and swimming. Swimming is about three hours or more of my afternoon after school everyday. I just have to figure out how to manage my time during school," Russell said.

Balancing classes, homework, social life and a competitive sport all at once is no easy task, but for many athletes, it has always been a part of their childhood.

"I've started swimming from a very young age, but I be-

WHAT DO YOU WANT TO IMPROVE ON THIS SEASON?

We really want to raise more money so that we could do more gymnastics during practices. I also would like to see the team doing more conditioning, such as running and more team motivation.

When is your next cheerleading competition?

We have a competition coming up Nov. 1, and it would be great to have Brookline fans cheer us on. Other schools have their entire football team and a lot of fans cheering them on, and it's a great feeling knowing that people care about their cheerleaders. We might even get a fan bus this year for competition, but who knows?

Do you think cheerleading is a dangerous sport?

There's a lot of physics involved with throwing people in the air and doing stunting, which is even more dangerous than regular repetitions. Nobody has gotten injured this year, and the best way for us to stay that way is to communicate and listen during practices.

How does cheerleading impact your school life?

Practice is from 5:30 p.m to 7:30 p.m, so I try to get most of my homework done before practices and during school. But if I didn't do cheerleading, I would procrastinate a lot more, so it definitely keeps me more focused.

When did you first start cheerleading?

I wasn't a cheerleader prior to BHS. I used to play around with my friends and do cartwheels and round-offs when I was younger, and I self taught myself how to do a front handspring when I was a kid. I was always jumping around and doing all sorts of things. I taught myself how to do those things, and then when I reached high school, I figured why not try out, since I'm very happy, peppy sort of person and I like being loud and cheerful.

This season I want to improve on my leadership skills, and I want to improve on my overall technique.

What would you consider your biggest role on the team to be?

My biggest role on the team would be a leader, because I am a captain. To a certain extent, the team does look up to me to make good plays and to make sure everything is fine.

What is your favorite memory from football?

My favorite memory would be from last year, my junior year. We were playing Newton North at Parsons Field. It was a home game. We got down by 17 points, and we put everything together and we won 36 to 17. It's my favorite highlight because it shows we had a lot of potential and we just really needed to work for it.

A lot of people have concerns about the injuries associated with football. What are your thoughts on that?

The biggest injury that people talk about is concussions. I've had one concussion since playing; actually, all of my injuries didn't come until last year. I look at it like this: If you play hard and you go full speed, your injuries are slim to none. You won't get an injury if you just go hard every play.

Do you have any advice for your teammates or incoming players?

My advice for the incoming players would be: Work hard. One of the biggest parts of football is to have an off season workout. If you don't have that, then it's very hard to be successful.

gan swimming competitively at sixth grade," Cruz said. "By the time I got to the high school, I was already so involved that I did not want to stop it."

Rosenkalt, who plays soccer for Suncoast Academy, has found ways to use every minute of time, even on the road.

"My teammates and I do our studying in the car while driving to practice in New Hampshire, which really helps. Whatever I don't finish, I try to do when I get home, like studying for a test," Rosenkalt said. "It's not easy though. I got six hours of sleep last night."

Even with challenges, these athletes find aspects about the sport that make them stay motivated and dedicated.

"My favorite aspect about swimming is that I'm with my teammates, and together we are setting goals for each other," Cruz said. "We always push each other, and because of that drive and ambition I am able to accomplish my goals. It's a really good feeling to set dreams for yourself and be able to fulfill them."

With the set of skills learned throughout the years of practicing on competitive teams, Rosenkalt can envision himself pursuing soccer in a Division 1 college and even beyond.

"The academy I'm in now is the best league in the country, so the best players are there, and the league was made by U.S. Soccer to develop players for the full national team," Rosenkalt said. "So, they have national scouts there at all the games, and all the college coaches come scout kids. College coaches will email me saying that they will be coming to one of my upcoming games like in New York."

Hard work and dedication will pay off for a rewarding accomplishment as many of these perservering and industrious athletes see themselves pursuing their sport in college.

Cruz said that doing Charles River Aquatics really helped her because it has kept her in shape all season.

"I am going to do it in college," Cruz said, "so doing outside sports has definitely prepared me for how strenuous and hard college swimming will be."

Girls volleyball team succeeds despite graduated seniors

After reaching the state semifinals last year, the girls volleyball team has experienced continued success despite graduating four starting seniors.

BARKER COLBERT-REGAN
Opinions Layout Editor

Despite graduating four starting players last year, the girls volleyball team anticipates another competitive, exciting season. The team placed second in the State Semifinals last year after losing to Barnstable High School, which has consistently been one of the top teams in the state.

Though the team has lost some talented players, they still feel that they have what takes to be successful.

"We will definitely make it to the playoffs, but it would be hard to make it to States," said junior Brooke Gibbons, the team's setter.

One of the team's biggest concerns is the mental readiness of the newcomers.

"There is plenty of talent, we just don't know how some of the younger girls will do when we play the teams in the championships who we don't usually play in the regular season," said co-captain and junior Lisa Terasuk.

This season will provide a good test for the younger players and will reveal how they stack up against other varsity teams.

"In our league, the Bay State League, the team to beat is Newton North, who graduated technically one senior that was a starter and Brookline graduated four seniors that were starters," new coach Kevin Russell said.

According to co-captain and senior Ali Brailey, the team is ready for the challenge of this season.

"Coach Mike left us prepared for this loss of players by playing the younger players as often as possible, throughout the season," Brailey said, referring to to the team's former coach, Michael Frank.

The team is counting on its younger players to quickly adapt to the talent of the opposing teams.

"We're asking the less played girls to compete against other teams that have more experienced, higher-level players," Russell said. "This means there is less experience competing against more skilled players so really you have to look at it as a rebuilding year in the sense that we expect to do well. It's just a question of how well we're going to do."

The team feels that making it to the playoffs will be manageable, but only if they work together to achieve this goal.

"To make it to the playoffs we need to win at least ten games, which will be easy," Terasuk said. "But only if we focus."

Legislature passes revised technology policy

MIRIAM EL-BAZ
News Writing Editor

Legislature passed a new technology bill with a 20-2 vote on Jan. 10 with one student and one teacher opposing.

The bill has been sent to Headmaster Deborah Holman, who has 15 days to sign, veto or propose certain changes to the bill before it can take effect.

The new policy, Rule 1.4: The Policy on Personal Electronic Devices, "recognizes the pervasiveness of technology in today's world" and acknowledges "a school culture that positions human interaction and the establishment of strong human relationship ahead of popular culture."

The bill outlines the use of personal electronic devices at the school with the acronym SMARTS: Students, Manners, Availability, Respect, Teachers and Silence.

According to Rule 1.4, the acronym emphasizes respectful, polite and silent usage of technology while in the building. Additionally, the use of technology should not interfere with a student's availability to others.

Under these guidelines, students may use personal electronic devices, including cell phones, pagers, smartphones, computers, tablets, MP3 players and cameras throughout the building.

Students use their cell phones in the hallway although the current technology bill prohibits the use of cell phones in the building during school hours. Rule 1.4, the new proposed bill, aims to allow all silent usage of technology during the day.

According to senior Natanya Levine, a legislator, the bill proposes that all technology can be used throughout the building as long as it is used silently. This makes certain activities like texting "legal" in the hallways, she said.

Rule 1.4 includes some restrictions on technology use. Students may not talk on cell phones during the day unless they are in the space between the atrium and the main doors, or outside.

Headphones are not allowed in the hallways unless a student is seated, and, as outlined in the current headphones policy, are not allowed during lunch hours in the cafeteria, overflow or quad.

Technology use in specific classrooms will be at the teacher's discretion, according to the bill.

Levine said she favors more flexible technology guidelines at the school, as long as this technology is used responsibly, respectfully and silently.

"We're hoping to make the technology policy more liberal," she said. "Students already use technology in the school, and that's perfectly legitimate. We just hope to make technology that is useful to students more accessible and legal within the school."

Dean Scott Butchart, a legislator, said that if he had arrived in time to vote on Rule 1.4, he would have voted against it.

"In a general sense, I favor this 'liberalization' of the policy," Butchart said. "But Ms. Alexander and I still feel some of the specific language is ambiguous. So, Ms. Alexander and I are asking the headmaster to let the faculty and administrative council still reflect a bit about whether the exact words used create a policy that is workable and fair and good. So what Legislature passed may still not be a final product."

According to Holman, the drafting committee successfully created a proposal that captured the essence of Legislature's many discussions concerning technology reform.

"As a first draft, it is really thoughtful," Holman said. "There are things in it that I recognize and feel good about, but the next big piece is taking it to a faculty meeting for wider faculty discussion. I really want to hear what the faculty has to say about it, and after I hear from them I'll make some decisions about what I'll do with it in terms of approving it or giving it back to Legislature to revise."

Holman said she plans to work quickly with staff in order to arrive at her decision within the 15-day deadline. She also said she hopes to have a multi-week pilot period for the bill next semester, after which students and faculty will evaluate its successes and failures.

Junior Jonathan You, a legislator, said he understands that some teachers may be skeptical about the bill, but he thinks it strikes an appropriate balance between using technology and adhering the school's values.

"Human interaction is important," he said. "So is evolving with the changing world."

Trial of alleged sex offending paraprofessional pushed back

ALEX JOHNSON
News Writing Editor

Benjamin Schwartz, a paraprofessional special education teacher in the Brookline Public School District, faces an ongoing criminal investigation after being arrested Nov. 15, 2012 for charges of possession of child pornography and dissemination of obscene matter.

Schwartz, 32, appeared in court for a second time on Jan. 10, 2013. His trial is postponed to March 27 on the grounds of pending analysis of evidence. Schwartz is on a leave of absence from the high school while the case is pending, according to Assistant Headmaster Hal Mason. However, Schwartz was already on leave prior to his arrest under the Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA) since Oct. 1, 2012, according to an email sent out on Nov. 16 by Superintendent of Schools Bill Lupini to Brookline parents and guardians following Schwartz's arrest.

"After this incident, I think a lot of teachers who had young children were kind of shook up hy it. He'd been out of school when this came up," Social Worker and Substance Abuse and Violence Prevention

Town turkeys are more meddlesome

Turkeys roam freely on Toxteth street and put the town's citizens in danger of attack. Police said the number of turkey related attacks has increased this year.

More than 30,000 turkeys take up residency in the state of Massachusetts, according to wickedlocal.com . This past fall, turkeys flocked the streets of Brookline standing taller than ever and proving to be no laughing matter.

Both the Brookline Police Department and the Public Health Department have received an increased number of calls this past fall from people complaining about being pestered or assaulted by turkeys.

Manning switches profession

Intern Patrick Manning assists guidance counselor Ellen Hertz this year. He left working in finance to pursue education.

Patrick Manning is a new addition to guidance counselor Ellen Herz's office this year.

He arrived at the school in September to work with Herz as a graduate college intern from Lesley University, who will stay up to the end of the year, and he has been helping students of Herz ever since.

Manning said that after graduating from Tufts University, he originally had trouble finding a job in the education field. This prompted him to work in finance. However, he still wanted to pursue education.

"It was always in the back of my head that at some point this is what I wanted to do as opposed to what I am doing," Manning said.

Now Manning wants to obtain his master's degree from Lesley University in counseling and psychology to become a guidance counselor.

He was inspired to choose the education field because of the teachers in his life.

"I always remember this history teacher who was just amazing," Manning said.

Now that Manning has grown older, he realizes the impact that these people had on him. He said that it definitely stuck with him.

Manning was also able to obtain some teaching experience before coming to the school. A program came to his college that offered an opportunity to visit Japan and teach. He lived in a city in northern Japan called Mutsu for one year after he graduated from college.

"It was awesome because I didn't study abroad in college because I switched my major a few times," Manning said.

Manning did not know Japanese, but that proved to be in his favor as the program preferred non-Japanese speaking teachers to maintain a constant English environment for the students. On the other hand, Manning said the language barrier made his adjustment to living in Japan difficult. He was out of his element.

Regardless, Manning said that he would love to travel more and revisit Japan, which he has not since visited.

"It is a really cool place that is so different from here. It's kind of surreal almost because I lived there for a year," Manning said.

Manning is using his time at the school to further capitalize on his experience in the education field. Through working with Herz, he has been experiencing the daily life of a guidance counselor, and it is helping him in preparation for becoming a counselor himself one day.

"I am learning a ton. September, to now, has been only three months, but I know so much more," he said. "And I know that there is so much more to learn."

Turkey attacks in Brookline on the rise surrounded by turkeys one morning after she had parked her car on Welland Road. Two cars tried to provide aid by honking at the turkeys, but they would not disperse.

"One person drove straight into the turkey circle to scare them away, honking his horn continually, threw open his passenger door and yelled, 'Jump in!'" Whitebone said. "I jumped in. I had no idea who this person was, and he drove me to school."

Turkeys have also bothered students at the school. Freshmen Isaiah Milton and Alexander Ervin both said that they have been chased by turkeys.

"I noticed that the turkeys were following me, so I walked kind of fast," Ervin said. "I turned around, and I was like, 'Oh my God, I'm about to die today!' So I started running. I was moving so fast nobody could catch me. I was scared out of my mind."

According to Brookline Chief of Environmental Health Patrick Maloney, turkey incidents have occurred more frequently around Tappan Street and Welland Road. He said there were three male turkeys around that area.

This was not the first time turkeys have taken to the streets of Brookline. Maloney said there was a similar occurrence three years ago around the Heath School, but the turkeys this time around "crossed the line and were overly aggressive."

Maloney said turkeys have actually jumped on people and scratched them.

"These are large birds, and it is at first glance neat to see wildlife up close, but they are quite large, and we know they can do significant damage," Maloney said. "Their talons are quite powerful, and they can do damage in the wrong scenario."

According to Maloney, residents should never feed the turkeys or treat them as a potential domestic animal. He said residents should clean up bird feeders or related objects because they could be a food source. When people stop feeding them and clean up their yard, the turkeys move on.

Maloney said that residents should also cover up as much shiny and reflective material as possible. Some turkeys see their own reflection and think that it is another bird. He said there were a number of complaints that turkeys surrounded the cars of residents and pecked at them.

Whitebone said that the police should definitely find a solution for dealing with the turkeys.

"These turkeys—some of them are bigger than little children I see walking on the same street," Whitebone said. "I'm a little concerned."

However, sophomore Sara Cohen does not see the need to find a solution.

"Let them be," Cohen said. "They're just turkeys."

JK Suh can be contacted at bbs.sagamore@gmail.com.

Tips for avoiding attacks:

1. Do not feed the turkeys.
2. Clean up bird feeders and other potential food sources in your yard.
3. Do not approach or treat as a potential domestic pet.
4. Cover up shiny objects such as car doors.

Evidence of Benjamin Schwartz case pending further analysis

Coordinator Mary Minot said. "It wasn't something that actually happened in the school. And it wasn't something that students were really aware of."

According to the email sent by Lupini, there is no indication yet that Schwartz has engaged in any inappropriate behavior with Brookline students.

"We will work collaboratively with the Brookline Police Department during this ongoing criminal investigation," Lupini said in his email. "Please be reassured that the safety of [Brookline] children is our greatest priority."

Mason also said safety measures are taken before an incident like this occurs.

"We take a lot of precautions. There's a lot of information that we look at whenever somebody is hired and whenever somebody works in the school building. There are a whole lot of precautions being taken already," Mason said.

But Mason said that "there is no precaution that allows [the school], nor should there be, to investigate somebody's world outside the school."

"It's not as if the school is able to go onto the home computers of the people that work in the school. That's not going to happen. We worry about people's behavior here at the school. That's our concern," Mason said.

According to the email, Schwartz has worked in Brookline for 10 years: at Pierce School from 2002 to 2003 and then at the high school since 2004. The Brookline Public Schools will not take any further action regarding Schwartz's employment until further discoveries have been made.

The Arrest and Trial

The Brookline Police, working together with Massachusetts State Police Internet Crimes against Children Task Force, arrested Schwartz on Nov. 15, 2012, according to a Brookline police report.

The police obtained a search warrant and searched Schwartz's residence, turning up video files containing obscene matter, according to the police report.

Schwartz was arraigned in Brookline District Court on Nov. 16, 2012. Schwartz, who appeared in court with his defense attorney, Christine Martin, pleaded not guilty.

According to the court documents, presiding Judge Mary Dacey White set cash bail at $7,500. Schwartz's other conditions of release included no contact with any child under age 18, wearing a GPS monitoring bracelet, staying away from the high school and Pierce School, no volunteering, the coaching or participating in any employment with children under age 18 and no internet access, including access through mobile devices in any public or private place.

The General Procedure For Inappropriate Behavior

It is very important that students know how to respond if they have knowledge of or feel that something inappropriate is occurring in the school, said Minott. The student should immediately find an adult authority in the school that he or she knows and trusts and tell them about it, said Mason.

Students that are witnesses to any inappropriate conduct in the school first hand should not attempt to intervene directly, Mason said.

"If you see something where somebody is in danger, then people's actions might be to intervene, but students would be better off contacting an adult," Mason said.

"When in doubt, go talk to your guidance counselor, even if you're concerned and just not really sure," Minott said. "It's important for students to feel comfortable, if there is something that they feel uncomfortable with, to go and talk with their guidance counselor."

According to Mason, once the student notifies an adult, that adult would then notify one of the deans, himself or Headmaster Deborah Holman. If there was only a violation of school rules, then the situation would be dealt with by the school superiors. In the case of a violation of the law, the superintendent would become involved, and the school would notify the police. The headmaster and superintendent would then work with the police to decide the next course of action.

"They would make a judgment very quickly as to the veracity of whatever the claim was, and if they felt that the evidence supported it, they would act appropriately, just as they did in [the Benjamin Schwartz] case, which was to take action to remove somebody from the school," Mason said.

If there were a student victim involved, the parents would be notified immediately, and if the claim was serious enough, the whole community. However, before the accused is put on leave, "there would have to be some standard of proof," said Mason.

Overall, according to Minot, it is crucial that students feel like they are going to be heard if they have concerns.

"If you're raising a concern, that's being a good citizen," Minott said. "How we keep Brookline High School safe is that we have a ton of adults here who care about kids. We hope students feel comfortable going to them with concerns and trust that they will handle it sensitively and delicately while also keeping kids safe."

Instructors strive to improve vocational curriculum

PAUL KIM
Copy Manager

In the basement of the Unified Arts Building is a room with three rusty cars from the 80s. Every morning at 8:20 a.m., a dozen or so students file into the room to work with various automotive tools and components. Standing in one corner is a whiteboard with Ohm's law written on it.

"Physics, science and automotive go very hand-in-hand," part-time automotive technology teacher Gerard Comeau said. "You need Ohm's law to check out all the electrical components on the car. This is practical physics in its essence."

Comeau, a retired teacher working as an interim instructor, said that 90 freshmen had signed up for this course, but the class could accommodate only 15 students this semester because the school has been unable to find a full-time instructor with appropriate credentials. For the same reason, the second-level automotive class is no longer being offered.

The school currently offers several vocational courses, which are designed to provide students with an opportunity to explore occupational fields, including those in business, medicine, culinary arts, automobile and engineering, but many of the vocational courses have room for improvement, according to guidance counselor Eric Shiff.

"Some of them are undersubscribed, and I think all of them are underfunded," said Shiff, who is part of the curriculum committee. "It would be nice to have more robust and complete voc tech offerings."

Junior Jared Pratt works on a car during Autotech, which is a part of the existing vocational program. Teachers who teach vocational courses at the high school hope the program will grow and improve over the next few years.

Comeau believes the best way to improve the automotive course is by restoring it to a full-time program.

"I think it'd be fun to have Automotive II because you continue what you've been doing right now," said freshman Michael Nally, who is taking the class this semester. "It's weird to end it where it is."

In response to the weaknesses in the vocational programs last year, the curriculum committee began reviewing the Career and Technology Education department. The process began by examining the current position, according to Assistant Headmaster Hal Mason.

"We are looking at what works and what doesn't work with the program, and what the program should be," said Mason, who is part of the curriculum committee. "A large part of the first year was designing the survey to talk to parents and kids."

According to Career and Technology Education Curriculum Coordinator Arnie Marcus, the curriculum review, which is a three-year process, is currently in its second year.

In the past months, the curriculum committee members have been visiting other schools to examine their programs.

"We went to site-visit Newton North and Cambridge Rindge and Latin School, which have huge programs. Classes run during all blocks. It's not something you get here and there," Shiff said. "So the committee feels 'maybe we can't replicate what these schools have, but we can move in that direction.'"

Right now, however, the school faces a few challenges.

"Money is an obstacle," Mason said. "And space—There are certain things you just cannot do because we do not have the space to do them."

Newton North, for example, has bigger buildings and newer facilities, and more kids are involved in the vocational program, Mason said.

Additionally, changes in the program can take a long time, according to Mason.

"It depends on what the changes are," Mason said. "Some would involve major changes, and you'd have to have whole new rooms and shops built in order to accommodate them. Some of them could be just changing the focus of programs."

According to Marcus, by the end of this year, there will be recommendations made and presented to the school committee, who will then discuss and vote on them. In the third year, the school will start implementing any changes.

Despite the improvements to be made, senior Carina Martins has already found success while taking the restaurant class, one of the vocational classes. She said that the class has helped her prepare for college and she is now certain she wants to pursue studies related to culinary.

"It's fun working in the restaurant. I learned a lot; I learned to love it," she said. "Maybe one day I want to found a place like this in a high school to teach others like I was taught."

Marcus said offering vocational courses is important in helping students explore potential careers.

"When you think about life after Brookline, it is important that they look at not only what they are interested in, but what they are not interested in," Marcus said. "Unless one knows exactly what they want to do and the pathway to get there, this is a great way to explore some different areas to see whether you like or dislike."

Draft of new schedule aims to increase time allotted for teacher conferences

MATTHIAS MUENDEL
Sports Writing Editor

The Brookline Educators Union and the Brookline School Committee have begun early discussions on changing the schedule for the school year starting in September 2013.

According to BEU President Jessica Wender-Shubow, there is currently an agreement between the two parties to extend four school days of the school week by 10 minutes while shortening one by 40 minutes. The short day has yet to be determined.

This new schedule is preliminary and subject to further modification.

"Students will get exactly the same number of minutes in class. It's just when they will have them," she said.

Students hoping for a longer lunch period are probably out of luck, according to Wender-Shubow. A more likely scenario, she said, would be extending a long block.

The main goal of the schedule changes, according to Wender-Shubow, is to give teachers a fixed time to work together to support the needs of students.

"The frustration with our school is that we are running from one thing to the other," Wender-Shubow said. "We are sometimes looking for information and understanding from one another, so we can work with the students support team to plan to meet the students needs. We often don't have any way to find each other in the building."

Spanish teacher Ricardo Calleja said he is in favor of the proposed change to the schedule. He said the shortened day will give him a set period of time to work with other Spanish teachers in the world languages department.

"I think the impetus for changing the school day has to do with building in some time planning time," Calleja said. "I think that, in itself, is a good thing. Very often, it is hard to find time in the school day."

For example, he said, teachers who teach a similar section are supposed to coordinate assignments and activities, but often they don't have time to meet.

Wender-Shubow said there is a strong evidence supporting that this new system would be successful.

"The research shows the school systems that give time in the school day to the teachers, not just being in front of students, actually serves them better," she said. "One of the most amazing ones is in Finland. They were the leaders in saying that a student can sometimes learn more even if there aren't as many minutes sitting in the class with the teacher."

The table above shows a hypothetical weekly schedule for the 2013-2014 school year based on the current agreements.

Wender-Shubow said the BEU and the School Committee also have plans to make changes to the Brookline elementary school schedule. According to Wender- Shubow, the two parties decided to discuss changes to the high school schedule first because of the complexity of its schedule.

"We knew when we sat across the table, the high school was going to be tougher," Wender-Shubow said. "That's why we are already starting, because we figure it's going to take some months to get this figured out, and some brains."

Students have been receptive to the new schedule plan.

"It would change the monotony of everyday being the same," junior Kenny Qian said. "Ten minutes each day isn't that much, but when it's 40 minutes, you get out much earlier."

Senior Ian Quillen said he thought the new schedule plan would be beneficial to teachers, but he also pointed out that some after-school activities could be impacted.

"I think it would give teachers more time to teach good material and be less rushed," Callesaid. "But it will cause sports to change, because if the school day gets longer, sports would too, which may be more problematic for some students who do sports on a regular basis."

Calleja said it is a positive sign that the school has recognized the tough position that teachers are often in.

"What I see is that our colleagues are doing this [coordinating] in their free time, their extra time," Calleja said. "They are staying after school longer. I really think it's good the school acknowledges that teachers need a common planning time and have a set plan for that."

Attendance policy faces revision

JOON LEE
Managing Visuals Editor

A new attendance policy limiting the number of absences implemented at the start of next school year, according to Headmaster Deborah Holman and English teacher Rebecca Hayden. The new policy attempts to clear up ambiguities in the current attendance policy by setting a definite number of excused and unexcused absences a student can have over the course of a year.

The bill was passed nearly unanimously by teachers on Tuesday, January 15 and will next be sent to superintendent Bill Lupini for approval. If the policy is ratified by Lupini and the school council, the policy will be official.

The current policy states that the school's attendance policy "is designed to improve attendance for all students and enhance the learning the environment in all classrooms."

It also states that "students with excessive absences, excused or unexcused, may be referred to their administrator for assistance."

Hayden said that students have abused the current attendance policy and that change is necessary.

"One of the things that the administrators and the faculty who have worked on this have put into the policy is an expectation that if you are in school for the day, you're expected to be in all of your classes," Hayden said. "That seems obvious, but I think for some students, that is going to be a change."

According to Holman, the new attendance policy will set the maximum allowed absences—excused or unexcused—at 21 per year. Holman said that the goal of the attendance policy is to "increase student learning through their attendance in class with the interactions between classmates and their teacher."

The proposed attendance policy would have an effect on students who desire to take prolonged vacations during school days. The new attendance policy will take into account both excused and unexcused absences. As a result, students wanting to take vacation on school days will have absences marked against them. The current policy allows students to have an unlimited amount of excused absences, allowing students to leave school as long as the absences are excused.

Education on the new policy will begin through advisory, classes, PTO meetings and written letters to families and students in the spring of 2013.

The current effort to change the attendance policy was started in faculty council according to Hayden. Dean Diane Lande started a committee about six years ago which includes Opportunity for Change Director Brian Poon, Lande, Hayden, parents and students. The committee spent a year drafting a proposal, which was taken to Superintendent Bill Lupini.

According to Hayden, Lupini did not want to take the proposal of the new attendance policy to the school committee for approval because he believed it would not pass.

Hayden said it was not until last year that Lupini told the committee to work on the proposal to present to the school committee. The policy was originally planned to be implemented at the start of the 2012-2013 school year, but the proposal was not ready for prime time, according to Holman.

> The attendance policy allows the freedom for you to still be absent when you have to be absent. The expectation is that those are excused absence, they're not cuts. The responsibility is to be in class and not cut
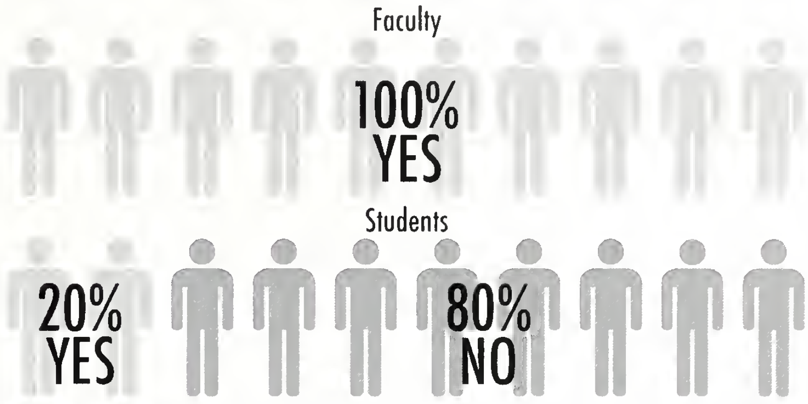
> Deborah Holman, headmaster

Many teachers, including Hayden, have problems with the current attendance policy as it stands. According to a recent survey sent out to high school staff via email, 92.6 percent of respondents are not satisfied with the current attendance policy and 100 percent of respondents believe that a change to the attendance policy is necessary.

Do you think a change in the attendance policy is necessary?



GRAPHIC BY ALEX FRIEDMAN

According to a survey distributed to 100 students, the majority of students believe the current attendance policy is not abused by students, while according to a survey distributed to 34 faculty members, the faculty unanimously disagreed.

"The main problem with the policy as it stands is that Brookline High allows an unlimited amount of excused absences," Hayden said, "which results in a lot of sleazing through the system, skipping a test when you don't want to, or all the way to really complex thorny problems where students miss 60, 70, 80, 90 days of school excused, so then you just have to ask yourself, are they actually a student in my class?"

According to Hayden, receiving no credit in a class, or "N-ing" out, will be at the dean's discretion and will depend on the situation.

"If you break your back and you're in the hospital for a month, no one's going to say that you've N-ed out. There will always be those rare exceptional cases where the deans will have the discretion to say, 'we're going to let you continue,'" Hayden said. "What Ms. Holman doesn't want is something with so many loopholes or some sort of appeals process that every kid who N's out is trying to appeal it. We want to do something that is fair but user-friendly."

In a recent survey sent out to students, 82 percent of respondents said that they were satisfied with the current attendance policy and 80 percent believed that no change in the policy was necessary. Seventeen percent of respondents said that students abused the current attendance policy while 58 percent said that students did not abuse the policy.

Senior Adam Rintell does not believe that any change in the attendance policy is necessary.

"Students should be able to decide to not attend class if there is no test and they have turned in an assignment in advance or via email. If students fail to stay responsible, their grades will suffer," Rintell said. "It doesn't give an out for a student to skip a test or project, and allows more time to study."

Junior Shigeru Kaneki feels that the impact on students will be minimal.

"The switch from any number of excused absences to 21 excused absences should not create any problems for students. This is going to prevent eighteen-year-old students from calling themselves out from classes they don't want to go to," Kaneki said. "It's not going to affect most of us. Twenty-one is a lot of absences."

Senior Eli Davis thinks that changing the attendance policy to be more strict does not follow the school motto of 'freedom and responsibility.'

"I think the main effect on students will be knowing that they are being limited. I think most people wouldn't even go over the limit, but just knowing that they are watching you and knowing that limit is set is kind of demeaning," Davis said. "It is more of a cultural, ethical thing that I don't think that the students should be limited."

Holman said that the new policy is in line with the school motto of freedom and responsibility and believes that students will benefit from the new policy.

"The attendance policy allows the freedom for you to still be absent when you have to be absent. The expectation is that those are excused absence, they're not cuts. The responsibility is to be in class and not cut," Holman said. "I think it does respect freedom and responsibility even though it comes off as perhaps a bit tighter than the previous policy. I think it will come out being a clearer policy to students, to teachers, to students and to administrators."

According to the recent survey of teachers, 74 percent of respondents believe that the new policy will have a positive effect on students.

English teacher Peter Sedlak says that the majority of students will not feel a difference between the current attendance policy and the new policy.

"Probably for 80 percent of the school, the policy won't make a difference. I think there is a large number of students who attend school regularly and aren't egregiously absent for any reason or taking vacations here or there," Sedlak said. "I think most of the population, when you really think about it, when we test out what their attendance will look like under a new policy, will realize it's not that big of a difference to what is going on."

Hayden believes that the policy will be "enormously beneficial" for teachers.

"Nobody would disagree that the more you are in school, the better the educational experience you are going to get. In general, kids attendance at Brookline High School is good. It's not a high number of people who are milking the system or who are truly abusing the system," Hayden said. "There are a lot of people who sort of know how to skip and where to cut corners and I'd say that the frustration level for faculty members will go down dramatically."

In the end, Holman believes that students should be in the classroom learning.

"The purpose of this place is to get students into learning situations and into classrooms," Holman said. "It's the responsibility of the students to be in class and do the learning that they are supposed to be doing."

Community remembers José Vázquez Vinasco

AARON SEGE

The photos on display showed a baby at his christening, a boy playing on a toy truck with his brother, and a young man in a high school hallway. In all, José Vázquez Vinasco was beaming.

Friends, family, teachers and doctors gathered together in the MLK Room on Monday, Jan. 14 to honor José, who passed away last month, in a memorial service called "Celebration of Life." They recalled a young man of sharp humor, surpassing intelligence and great courage.

José was born and raised in Puerto Rico. At age 11, in 2005, he was diagnosed with leukemia. For two years he received treatment, but six months after that, the cancer came back. In 2009, he had his first bone marrow transplant, but six months later, he relapsed a second time.

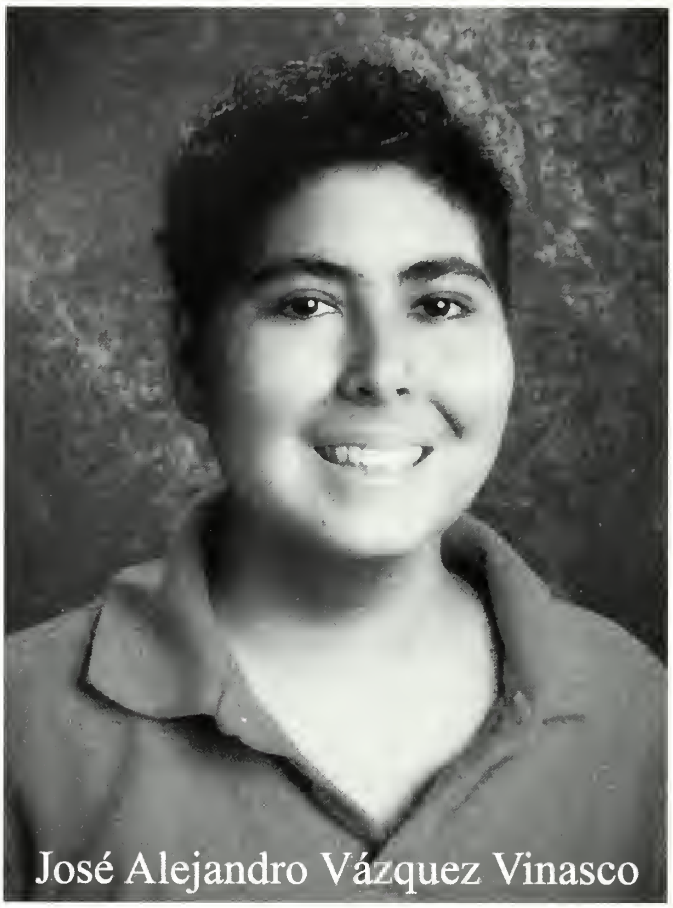
Monica Vinasco, his mother, recalled a visit from Make-A-Wish Foundation representatives that occurred when they lived in Puerto Rico.

"They hadn't met a kid who had read so much and was so studious," she said. "So when they asked him, 'Where do you want to go?' He said he wanted to go to Santorini, in Greece, and they didn't even know what that was."

According to Vinasco, when the representatives returned, they turned down his request, not believing that a twelve-year-old would want to go to archeological ruins in Europe. Vinasco decided the family would vacation in Pompeii, Italy on their own because there weren't the right hospitals in Greece. A week after having received chemotherapy, José climbed Mount Vesuvius.

According to Vinasco, the two moved to Brookline in early 2010 because there was no more treatment available in Puerto Rico. In May, he participated in a clinical trial in which he received a second bone marrow transplant.

According to Brookline Resilient Youth Team Clinical Coordinator Ray Feller, a bone marrow transplant is very sensitive; while it did save José from the leukemia, it also slowed his white blood cell production. BRYT Program Coordinator Annie Eagle said that it was clear by the fall of 2012 that his immune system was compromised, making him more susceptible to disease. On November 24, he contracted pneumonia. José was admitted to the hospital and passed away on December 11. He was 18.



José Alejandro Vázquez Vinasco

According to Feller, José had been adamant that people know he had not died of cancer.

"He didn't like cancer, and he wanted everyone to know he had beaten it, and that it had not won," she said.

He was a sophomore when he moved to Brookline. Because he was in the hospital that spring, he was tutored by BRYT aide Nick Herbert. He was also in BRYT at the start of junior year, because he knew we would have to miss school for hospital visits.

At that time, Feller said that there was a lot of downtime in BRYT because José was on top of his homework and not many other students had joined the program. To fill the time, José and the staff played word games.

"He was really, really good, and really liked being good," Feller said. "He would spend time destroying us at Scrabble, and when one of us would win, we would of course rub it in that we had won in return, but he was very well-practiced with words, which is impressive, too: He was playing Scrabble with English as his second language, and defeating an English major like myself."

According to Eagle, while José was realistic about his health challenges, he never complained about them.

Despite José's challenges Feller said that he came to school eager to learn.

"If there was a test coming up and people were saying, 'Well, do you feel like you're ready,' he'd say, 'Well, I beat cancer, I think I can handle a biology test,'" she said.

In the end, José earned a 4.0 GPA for his junior year, and Feller said he was proud of his success.

"He would say, 'Oh, I didn't get to pick up my grades. Can you look them up for me? And I think he really knew what they were, he just really wanted me to look at them. He would always get really amazing comments, and he worked really hard. He did just stellar," Feller said.

According to Eagle, José also had a great sense of humor.

"He was an observer. Even if he was just in our room, doing work, I could tell that he was looking around, listening to conversations and he always had a witty comment for something," she said. "If kids were getting stressed, he always had a funny sense about himself that sort of brought the pressure down."

According to Eagle, José had to use a walker for a while. When he went to lunch, he would let kids ride on the walker as he pushed it down the cafeteria ramp.

"That was his sort of way of making the best of a situation," Eagle said.

Vinasco said that her son had a very brave attitude throughout his sickness.

"He decided it was not going to kill him. And he just marched on, went back to school," she said.

Eagle said he was both honest and hopeful about his condition.

"He fought until the very end," she said. "He wasn't in denial about what was happening, but I think he was very realistic about what may happen."

According to Vinasco and Feller, it was decided that a memorial would be held at the high school because José loved it.

"He wanted people to know him first as a good student and not as that kid with cancer," Feller said.

At the memorial service, Dr. Brenton Mar, José's primary oncologist, spoke as did José's close friend junior Eliana Von Krusenstiern and José's cousin Ronny Bachrach.

Herbert sang "Somewhere Over the Rainbow." He was accompanied on the guitar by Rodrigo Vázquez Vinasco, José's older brother, who studies at Berklee College of Music.

On one wall stretched a long piece of poster paper where classmates and teachers had written remembrances.

Feller said that she feels truly lucky to have known José.

"I think the consensus from everyone was we're all really sad, but much happier having known him than if we hadn't," she said. "He gave something to everybody that he met and certainly gave a lot to me."

Ms. Deborah Holman
Headmaster

Dear BHS Class of 2013,

Congratulations on this milestone in your lives. Your Brookline High School education and experience will serve you extremely well as you move forward into our grand and diverse world. Please continue your good work of learning, creating, innovating, and being a good citizen in our democratic society. And as you hit challenges in life, which you no doubt will, remember the BHS motto of "hard work over time." You have applied that motto here, now apply and live it beyond the walls of BHS. It is a motto for all ambitious adults to believe in and practice; through your hard work over time, you can achieve anything. I thank you for being an awesome senior class during my first year as Headmaster of BHS. Thank you for the advice, the challenges, and the fun. Keep your heads up, good luck in all that you do, and remember to come back to BHS and let us know how you are doing.

Ms. Deborah Holman, Headmaster

Senior

To the Class of 2013,

I sincerely cannot thank you enough for the four wonderful years we have had together at Brookline High School. I believe Brookline High School is the best school in the nation because all of our educators have worked hard to help you become change agents in our society. Mahatma Gandhi said, "You must be the change you wish to see in the world." Indeed, your generation will face significant challenges that will only be resolved by strong ethical leadership, so I implore you to have the audacity to change the world. And although you are moving on to face these new challenges in your life, please know that Brookline High School will always be your home.

To the Class of 2013,

Having only been your associate dean for two years, I nonetheless feel I have gotten to know you well. I know your sports scores, your SAT scores, your favorite and least favorite classes, your aspirations for the future, and your worries about the present. I wish you every chance of attaining those aspirations and a fond farewell.
